

The pinnacle of Piedmont wines are the powerful, long-lived and aromatic wines made with the nebbiolo grape, especially those from the Barolo and Barbaresco regions. As in Burgundy, being acquainted with the winemaker is essential, as properties are often fairly small in size and the style of wine is usually a reflection of the winemaker's personality. This is truer than ever now that the Piedmontese are seeking to modernize their wines adapting them to international styles. And although Barolo is considered a very traditional wine, it is indeed in this region that one may find wines of very different styles, so different in fact that it would be difficult to trace their origins in a blind tasting. Founded in 1850 and currently managed by the 5th generation of the family, the Azienda...
