

Villa Poggio Salvi is located in the rolling hills of Siena, Tuscany, only a few kilometers from the village of Montalcino. Its location is sunny and ideal for grape growing, with enough altitude and sea breeze to allow for a warm but relatively cool growing season. Its name means "the estate of the healthful hill," a reference to its ancient past when residents of the moist Maremma district along the Tuscan coast were plagued with cholera and came up to these hills to recuperate. The philosophy at Villa Poggio Salvi is to make traditional wines with modern technologies... wines suited to modern tastes of the discriminating international consumer. It is a new and ambitious project, with a modern facility located winery just below the ancient Villa. It includes temperature controlled...
